#2 A JAUNT ALONG THE RIVER ROUGE.

BACK TO NATURE.

"BACK to nature," we smiling said, we two
Who lazed and loitered all that autumn day
In full content along the river's edge,
Whose waters rippled silver 'neath the boughs,
With just the faintest murmur in their flow.

We plucked the purple lobes from wreathing vines,
In tangles wild the regal asters grew,
And o'er the marsh the mallows spilled their gold.

A calm, still day, with softest veiling haze,
The toilers busy midst the rustling corn,
That gleamed like wigwams along the rounded hills,
Where chirped the lazy crickets in the sun.

The silent leaf that left the crimson thorn,
The traces still of blooms we dearly loved,
With miles on miles in banks of yellowing ferns

My Kentucky

My Kentucky is the paradise on this earth
Yes, she is covered with hevenly blue grass turf.

Kentucky's air is surprisingly divine
Everlastingly like the rarest old wine!
Never nothing except eternal bliss
There never was another place like this!
Universally acknowledged, the grandest state
Could never contain anything except the great!
Kentucky is the divinest of earthly homes
Yonder with the rarest of all the blue grass loams.
